SITE MANAGER

earn from £25,000 to £80,000
in Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly

What role do Site Managers play in the Construction & Built Environment Industry?

Construction Site Managers organise building projects, supervising works and different teams on a site. They work on site, or from the site office, in all weathers to keep projects on schedule and within budget and meet safety and quality standards. They also report on progress to customers, staff and the public. Find out more here:

- You'll use DIGITAL tools to plan and manage projects
- MATHS will be crucial to manage orders and budgets
- Site Managers are expert NEGOTIATORS who can solve conflicts between teams

Get started with a University or College course or an Apprenticeship

Experienced tradespeople such as carpenters and groundworkers often progress into Site Management by training on the job.

With experience and training, Site Managers can move into Project or Contracts Management
